From Tarrant County Crime Stoppers

Crime Stoppers: How Tarrant County Is Fighting Crime

Crime Stoppers began in Albuquerque, New Mexico in September 1976 when concerned citizens joined with local media and law enforcement in an effort to help curb crime. Individuals calling with information leading to the arrest of a person or persons involved in felony offenses were paid a cash reward. To preserve program integrity, informants were never required to give their names.

Today, there are more than 1,200 Crime Stoppers programs in the United States, Canada, United Kingdom, Australia, South Africa, Central America, and the Caribbean. Collectively, these programs have solved more than half a million crimes, and recovered about $7 billion in stolen property and narcotics worldwide.

In this same tradition, Crime Stoppers of Tarrant County utilizes information from anonymous tipsters to arrest felony offenders. Since its inception in 1982 in Tarrant County, Crime Stoppers has paid more than $3 million in rewards and recovered over $36.5 million in property and narcotics. Additionally, over 14,447 offenders have been arrested, with more than 34,732 cases cleared.

Who Benefits From Crime Stoppers

Crime Stoppers benefits everyone, adults, children, small business owners; the list is as long as it is diverse.

Crime Stoppers of Tarrant County takes tips for all municipalities and school districts in Tarrant County; helping to ensure the safety of more than 1.9 million citizens. Crime Stoppers relies primarily on grants and probation fees to operate.

Why Do We Need Crime Stoppers

Crime Stoppers helps to reduce crime, and the fear of crime, in homes, schools, businesses, and communities countywide. Essential to continued public safety, Crime Stoppers is the only program of its kind.

Based on the theory that someone other than the offender has information regarding crime, Crime Stoppers was created to combat three major problems faced by law enforcement: fear of reprisal, an attitude of apathy, and a reluctance to get involved. Crime Stoppers addresses these obstacles by offering anonymity to people who provide information about a crime and paying rewards when the information supplied leads to an arrest.

How Does Crime Stoppers Work?

All tips submitted through the Crime Stoppers of Tarrant County hotline, online forms, live chat, and/or mobile apps are sent to the Crime Stoppers of Tarrant County Call Center.

The call center is staffed by off-duty public safety dispatchers and other trained personnel, who take calls and online submissions and then disseminate the tip information to the appropriate law enforcement agency for investigation.

Each caller will receive a tip number to be used in all future correspondence. Every tipster remains anonymous; callers do not have to identify themselves. A reward of up to $1,000 will be offered to anyone who provides a tip that leads to an arrest for a crime or a criminal case cleared.

Crime Stoppers Coordinator Training

During a free training on Wednesday, June 8 at One Safe Place, 1100 Hemphill Street, Fort Worth, TX 76104 from 1 to 3 p.m., Crime Stoppers will provide details on how the program can benefit your community or department, provide training on how Crime Stoppers works, and discuss projects and initiatives that may be a resource to you. Contact rgilbert@onesafeplace.org, 817-502-7112 with questions.

First Monday Quilt Club:

Project Linus Volunteers Needed

Come join the fun and enjoy great fellowship at the monthly meeting with the Quilt Club volunteers while you make a difference in our community and bless others by making quilts for Project Linus.

The First Monday Quilt Club meets on the first Monday of each month at Bethany Christian Church located at 1500 Meadow Park Drive in White Settlement from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Instead of a potluck lunch, ladies are asked to bring snack items. Their next meeting is on Monday, June 2.

Project Linus is a non-profit service organization. The members of this group are Tarrant County Chapter Project Linus volunteers who create handmade quilts and blankets that provide warmth and comfort for local children who have suffered tragedy or illness. Volunteers also make coverlets for veterans, nursing home residents, and the homeless. Unfortunately, the need for these blankets increases each month. They desperately need volunteers with portable sewing machines to help assemble the quilts.

No experience is needed. Anyone can help if you can follow instructions, sew, tie a knot, crochet a blanket, or tell a good joke. Volunteers have lots of fun and high school students can receive community service credits for participating. Materials (fabric, batting, thread, and yarn) are provided. Donations of fabric, yarn, thread, or money to purchase materials are greatly appreciated.

For more information about the mission of Project Linus, visit www.projectlinus.org. For more information on this group and meetings, call Virginia Biela at 817-244-1263.

Are You Mowing Your Lawn to the Correct Height?

One of the most highly debated topics in lawn care, mowing height, is also one of the most important.

That’s why Exmark has partnered with landscape designer, Doug Scott with Redeem Your Ground, on a new video offering tips and insights for selecting the right height of cut for your lawn. So, why is mowing height so critical?

“Grass mowed to the right height better captures the light, rain and nutrients your lawn needs, helping it grow deeper, denser, stronger and healthier,” says Scott. “Mowing too low makes your lawn susceptible to being burned by the sun, weakening the roots and creating the potential for a weed infestation. Whereas mowing too high runs the risk of excess moisture build-up, which creates a welcoming environment for pests.”

To strike the right balance, follow the golden rule of mowing: Never cut off more than one-third of the blade at a time, even if your lawn is overgrown. While you may feel like you’re saving time, a harsh haircut does your lawn a major disservice. Gradually lowering your blades to the desired height will help maintain a strong root system and lush yard canopy.

Another consideration is grass type, with warm-season grass and cool-season grasses falling into two mowing height ranges.

For warm-season grasses, like Bermuda, you’ll want to drop the deck height of your mower close to its lowest setting, close to between one-to-two inches high. That’s because these grasses thrive in the scorching summer sun, so they can handle a lower height. If you have cool-season grass, like Fescue or Kentucky Bluegrass, you’ll want to cut it a little bit higher. These grasses are built for freezing winters and need some height as protection from the elements. So make sure to keep your cool-season lawn between two-to-four inches high.

“While knowing the range for each grass type provides nice guardrails for mowing, where you mow within that range changes with the season,” warns Scott.

Once springtime rolls around, lower your deck height by a half inch from your normal summer height. This encourages new growth.

During summer, mow on the higher end of your grass type’s specified range. Taller grass provides shade to the soil, retaining vital moisture needed to help your lawn stay healthy and cool.

In fall, continue your normal summer routine, especially if you have warm-season grass. If you have a cool-season lawn, you might have to up your mowing frequency, as it’s this grass type’s prime growing season.

For the last mowing session of the year, drop your mowing height by half an inch again. That brings you up to winter, the perfect time of year for you and your lawn to rest. With most grasses going dormant in winter, mowing isn’t typically necessary. So take that time to do other activities and tasks you enjoy in the yard. For warmer climates, you can continue to mow, just cut down on the frequency to ensure a healthier lawn.

For more insights, watch “How to Determine Mowing Height,” a new episode of “Done-In-A-Weekend Projects,” an original series from lawn care equipment manufacturer, Exmark. To watch the video, visit Backyard Life, focused on helping homeowners improve their outdoor living spaces.

Lawn care is both a science and an art. With the right know-how and experience, you can cultivate a lawn that provides you with an abundant backyard life.

Summer Safety: Phones Down, Eyes Up - Preventing Drownings with Active Supervision

As temperatures rise and families flock to pools, lakes, and beaches, the simple act of putting phones down can save lives.

Drowning is one of the leading causes of death for children under 14, and it often happens silently and in seconds.

One of the most effective ways to prevent it is through active supervision, having a dedicated Water Watcher.

A Water Watcher is a responsible adult assigned to keep their full attention on swimmers without distractions. That means no texting, no scrolling, and no phone calls. The role can rotate every 15 to 30 minutes to avoid fatigue, but while on duty, the Water Watcher should maintain constant visual contact with all swimmers, especially young children or those who are not strong swimmers.

It's a myth that splashing or yelling will always signal trouble, drowning is often quiet. Children can slip beneath the surface unnoticed in the time it takes to check a notification.

Creating a culture of "phones down, eyes up" during swim time ensures children are safer. Designating a Water Watcher and eliminating distractions can make the difference between a fun day in the water and a tragic accident. Stay alert. Be present. Save a life.

Identifying Venomous & Nonvenomous Snakes

Identifying venomous snakes from non-venomous ones is crucial for anyone living in or visiting areas inhabited by these reptiles. Several key characteristics can aid in distinguishing between the two.

Firstly, observe the snake's head shape and size. Venomous snakes typically possess triangular-shaped heads, wider at the back and narrowing towards the snout. This is due to the venom glands located behind their eyes, giving them a distinct shape. Nonvenomous snakes, on the other hand, often have heads that are more rounded or oval-shaped.

Examine the snake's eyes. Venomous snakes usually have elliptical or slit-like pupils, similar to a cat's, whereas nonvenomous snakes typically have round pupils.

Consider the body length and shape. Venomous snakes tend to have shorter, thicker bodies, while nonvenomous snakes may be longer and more slender.

Check for pit organs. Many venomous snakes, such as pit vipers, have heat-sensing pits located between their eyes and nostrils, which aid in detecting warm-blooded prey. Nonvenomous snakes generally lack these pits.

Lastly, observe the coloration and patterns. While there are exceptions, venomous snakes often have vibrant colors or distinctive patterns, serving as a warning to potential predators. Nonvenomous snakes may also have patterns, but they are typically less bold and striking.

Remember, it's essential to exercise caution with all interactions with snakes in the wild. When in doubt, it's best to give them space and appreciate them from a safe distance.

If you encounter a snake and are unsure of its venomous status, seek assistance from a local expert or wildlife authority.

Anson Jones: The Last President of the Republic of Texas and the Struggle for Statehood

Texas is one of four states to once have been an independent nation. Though only a short period in its long history, it has become a source of curiosity and pride for many. The last man to serve as president for the Republic of Texas was Dr. Anson Jones. While he guided Texas to statehood, his life was one of successes and failures.

Jones was born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, in January 1798. His education was sporadic, but he possessed a great intelligence and a strong sense of curiosity. As a teenager, he lived in Seneca Falls, New York. He hoped to become a printer, but he soon decided to become a physician. He apprenticed under a local doctor and was soon licensed by the Medical Society of Oneida, New York. His practice, however, struggled and he ran up large debts. He moved to Philadelphia to open a new practice and began operating a school. However, his money problems grew worse and was arrested for non-payment of his debts in 1824. He fled for Venezuela and eventually returned to Philadelphia. He received a formal medical degree at Jefferson Medical College in 1827.

His financial fortunes did not improve, so he left Philadelphia for New Orleans in 1832, hoping to become a merchant in the growing port city. However, his situation did not improve, and he grew increasingly frustrated. In 1833, friends persuaded him to move to Texas, and he settled in Brazoria. By the next year, he had a thriving medical practice and became increasingly involved in local politics. He also became involved with the local Masonic Lodge and Odd Fellow society.

The relationship between Texas settlers and Mexico became increasingly belligerent as the Mexican government became increasingly heavy-handed in its dealings with its critics. Jones began to openly call for Texas independence. In December 1835, after fighting had begun between settlers and the Mexican Army, a number of settlers met in Columbia for a meeting called the Consultation, to help decide the next move by settlers. Jones led a call for a convention to declare independence by the following spring, but he would not put his name in contention to be a delegate.

As warfare spread, Jones joined the fight. By the spring of 1836, he was serving in the Second Regiment as a judge advocate and a surgeon. He soon rose to become apothecary general of the army. After Texas won the war, he returned to Brazoria to resume his medical career. He was elected to the Texas Congress and pushed for legislation to encourage education and the creation of a national university. He pushed for medical regulations and opposed the creation of a state-run bank and railroad company.

President Sam Houston appointed him as Texas ambassador to the United States in 1838. Both men saw that the effort to annex Texas to the United States was faltering and agreed to withdraw the request for the time being. In the meantime, he attempted to work with Europe and the United States to improve trade. Houston could not run for re-election, and Mirabeau B. Lamar was elected president.

Lamar replaced Jones as ambassador, and Jones returned to Texas to serve in Congress once again. Jones became increasingly critical of Lamar’s policies and spending. Lamar was extremely unpopular as his term ended in 1841. Houston announced he would run for president once again. Jones declined to run for vice-president. Voters returned Sam Houston to the presidency by a wide margin.

Houston was determined to make Texas part of the United States. He hoped to make Texas look too valuable economically and too important strategically for the United States to ignore, and Jones agreed. Houston appointed Jones as his secretary of state, and the two began negotiations with the United States for annexation once again. As progress began to be made on annexation, this put Jones on track to be Texas’s president with the 1844 election.

Part II

In one of the most delicate moments in the history of Texas, Anson Jones stood at the center. When Sam Houston became president of the Texas Republic a second time in December 1841, he quickly named Jones as secretary of state. Looking at continuing skirmishes with Mexico and failing finances, Houston hoped to try annexation a second time. Jones, a physician by training, had to navigate the chaotic diplomatic waters.

The entire question of Texas’s fate hinged on the increasingly tense debate over slavery in the United States. Slavery was still legal in Texas. Northern abolitionists were horrified at the prospect of admitting such a large slave territory into the Union, one that they feared would wreck the delicate political balance in the country. Talk of splitting Texas into smaller states, expanding the South’s Senate influence even further, frightened abolitionist politicians. President Andrew Jackson favored annexation, but with his term in office ending in 1837 and Mexico threatening war with the United States over the issue, he decided not to pursue it. Jackson would not enter a fight he could not finish. His successor, President Martin Van Buren of New York, increasingly moved against slavery and saw interest in Texas annexation fading. President William Henry Harrison of Indiana never had time to weigh in on the Texas question in his one month in office in 1841. All this had left Texas alone in the wilderness.

By 1842, President John Tyler of Virginia began expressing interest in Texas again. Houston and Jones knew annexation was not assured. Both worked to maintain healthy trade relations with Europe, hoping that expanding them might make the U. S. more inclined to bring in Texas.

On April 12, 1844, an annexation treaty was signed, but it faced ratification in the U. S. Senate. On June 8, it failed by a vote of 16-35. Tyler pursued a simple bill to admit Texas, which would require both houses of Congress. But 1844 meant presidential elections in the U. S. and in Texas. In the U. S., James K. Polk of Tennessee won a close contest where Texas annexation figured prominently.

In Texas, the 1844 presidential election pitted Jones against Vice-President Edward Burleson. Texans were heavily in favor of annexation. Burleson charged Jones with being against annexation because of his diplomatic overtures to Europe, a charge Jones denied. In the close contest, Jones prevailed by a margin of 7,037 to 5,668.

When Jones assumed office in December, he knew annexation was far from certain. Mexico still threatened Texas, Texas was near bankruptcy, and trade with Europe faltered as negotiations with the U. S. continued. Jones said nothing about annexation in his inaugural address. Inflation had made the Texas currency all but worthless. Nevertheless, Jones pursued construction of a 75-foot lighthouse as well as a hospital on Galveston Island. He pushed a policy of peace with the Native American tribes, securing a peace treaty with the 11 major tribes of Texas by February.

In January 1845, the U. S. House passed an annexation bill, one that passed the U. S. Senate by a one-vote margin a month later. Tyler signed the bill on March 1, just before he left office.

Mexico tried to derail annexation by offering a peace treaty and recognition of Texas which attracted little interest in Texas. Jones pushed the Texas Congress to support annexation and a state constitutional convention. Congress approved the measures in June. His vice-president, San Augustine lawyer Kenneth Anderson, died suddenly in July 1845 at age 39. The office would never again be filled.

Texas statehood was made official on December 28. On Feb. 19, 1846, statehood was made official. In a solemn ceremony, Jones turned over his office to the state’s first governor, J. Pinckney Henderson. He told the gathering, “The final act in this great drama is performed. The Republic of Texas is no more.”

After his presidency, Jones co-founded the Texas Medical Society in 1853. He bought a large plantation near Washington-on-the-Brazos, which he named Barrington, after his home town.

While his plantation remained prosperous, he grew increasingly frustrated and despondent that his political career had come to a halt. His attempts at a political comeback were repeatedly thwarted, and he sank into depression. The state legislature, increasingly frustrated with Houston’s performance as a U. S. Senator, prepared to vote to replace him in January 1858. Jones hoped to secure the position but lost decisively. Despondent, Jones went to the site of the old Texas capitol in Houston and, on January 9, took his own life. He was 59.

In 1884, the state legislature named Jones County in his honor. Several schools across Texas have also been named for him. His homestead in Washington County has since become a state historic park and acts as a historic living farm for tourists.

Jones is buried in Houston.
